The focus of this course will be to introduce the student to the three key elements of drama: focus, movement, and communication. The course will move through a pedagogy of activities that builds the students' confidence and moves to a place where they can combine the three elements of focus, movement and communication seamlessly to tell the story. The first semester will be focused on training and will end (depending where the students are at) with exercises in improvisation. The second semester will begin with auditions and the students will work towards performing a small production at the end of the term.

Note: times will be extended and more rehearsals will be added in the second semester in order to accommodate what is needed for a production. A schedule will be provided prior to the registration of the course for the second term.
